

Marketing, Communications and Reputation Policy

Section 1 - Introduction

- (1) The University of Newcastle (University) brand and reputation are valuable assets.
- (2) The University aims to present itself in a cohesive manner that influences respective audiences and enhances the University's reputation, expertise and offerings. Marketing and communication activities by the University play a key role in achieving this aim.

Section 2 - Purpose

- (3) The aim of this policy is to establish the governance requirements of the University's marketing and communications to protect its brand and enhance its reputation by:
- supporting a single, consistent corporate image for the University;
 - managing the use of the University's brand across its controlled, and associated entities;
 - enabling a coordinated approach across all marketing, communications, platforms and channels managed by the University; and
 - identifying the roles and responsibilities of staff and students in the ongoing management of the University's brand and reputation.

Section 3 - Definitions

- (4) In the context of this document:
- "advertising" is a collective term that refers to paid communications used to influence an audience to take a specific course of action. For example, to study at, work at, or donate to the University. Advertising includes but is not limited to print, outdoor, indoor, magazines, digital, video, television, cinema and radio;
 - "brand" is a collective term given to visual, written, video, or audio elements that enable a single and consistent appearance;
 - "channel" describes the communication platform, technology or method used to communicate to University audiences, eg social media, media outlet, email, website, publication, etc.;
 - "channel owner" refers to the University role that is responsible for the ongoing management of a specific channel;
 - "domains" are a distinct subset of the Internet which use addresses that share a common suffix or are under the control of a particular organisation or individual;
 - "lead generation" is the process of capturing personal information with the aim of increasing a person's interest through targeted communications, with the end goal of turning that interest into a purchase of a product and/or service;

- g. “media” is a collective term that refers to services and products that publish news and information, including but not limited to: printed publications; television and radio broadcasting services; and online and digital products and services such as websites, email newsletters (e-newsletters), blogs, webcasts, streaming services, podcasts, vodcasts, online magazines and e-publications;
- h. “media agency” refers to an external provider who provides professional services in the planning and execution of paid advertising;
- i. “media outlet” refers to a publication or broadcast entity that provides news and feature stories to the public through distribution channels such as newspapers, magazines, radio, television, and the Internet;
- j. “platform” describes technology utilised to host an application and/or service for marketing and communication purposes;
- k. “remarketing” is a tactic of presenting targeted advertisements to people who have already visited or taken action on a website or digital advertising;
- l. “reputation” defines how the University wishes to be perceived as an entity and encompasses our brand, culture, leadership and the key values we stand for;
- m. “social media” is a collective term that refers to websites and applications that enable users to create and share information or ideas with others, or to participate in social networking;
- n. “social media channel owner” refers to the University role that is responsible for the ongoing management of a specific social media channel;
- o. “user-generated content” is a collective term given to original, brand specific content created and published by customers on social media or other channels. User-generated content comes in many forms, including images, videos, reviews, a testimonial, or even a podcast;
- p. “WCMS” refers to web content management system software that provides website authoring, and is an administrative tool that supports the University's web publishers to create and manage website content;
- q. “web approver” refers to a member of University staff who, having completed the required training, have responsibility for reviewing, approving or rejecting content created by a web publisher prior to being published;
- r. “web content community” refers to a group of University staff responsible for creating and maintaining content on newcastle.edu.au;
- s. “web information architecture” is the logical, strategic and functional capabilities across newcastle.edu.au that ensures all areas of the University present as one coherent offering; and
- t. “web publisher” refers to a member of University staff who, having completed the required training has the ability to create, edit and manage content within WCMS.
